Friends of Dr. Arthur G. Wiley are interested in the article below which appeared in the current issue of The Business Month: "In surveying the conditions existing today in various hospitals of the East it is interesting to note that in many cases real progress has been achieved and records of service established, even in a comparatively short time, which have won wide commendation. "Coming in the latter category is the record of the Buxton-Hollis Hospital of Bar Mills, Maine. This institution was founded in 1925 and has progressed steadily since that time. "Today it is thoroughly modern, has the finest type of equipment and extends to the people of its community an efficient and capable medical and hospital service. "Dr. Arthur G. Wiley, the head of the hospital, has won recognition for the able manner in which he has directed it. ## $3,000,000 ROAD TO BE PROPOSED TO MAINE STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSION

According to an announcement made Saturday a proposal will be made to the Highway Commission Feb. 20 for a $3,000,000 international highway connecting Portland and St. Augustin, Que. An organization has been formed to back the project and it is said that 10,000 names will be on the petition to be presented.

The committee in charge of the proposition feels that it has an excellent chance to secure Federal funds as it would furnish employment to many along the route and open up a scenic section of the State. Enthusiastic meetings have been held already in towns situated along the route.

As outlined the highway would leave Route 26 below Poland Spring and go to East Poland to Mechanic Falls over Harris Hill. This section would be new construction. Leaving Mechanic Falls the road goes to West Minot, Buckfield, Sumner, Labrador Pond, Peru, Rumford, and Mexico. New road would be built in Peru. The road would pass through Frye and Byron to Houghton and over the way already planned to Oquossoc. Beyond there the route lays between Parmachenee and Kennebeco Lakes to the Canadian line.

It is said that by this route St. Augustin is only about 120 miles from Portland, making a more direct route to Quebec.

ARTHUR HERRICK NOW ACTING POSTMASTER

Arthur E. Herrick began his duties Monday morning as acting postmaster at Bethel, succeeding Miss Cleo A. Russell, who has held the position of postmaster since 1922.

Mr. Herrick is well fitted for this office. He has been practically a life-long resident of Bethel, although born in Greenwood. He graduated from Gould Academy in 1909, and taught school at West Bethel and as principal of Bethel Grammar School three years. He was chauffeur for two summers for New York people and worked for Herrick Bros. and Herrick Bros. Co. until 1919 when he opened a garage on Mechanic Street. From the beginning his venture was successful and he soon moved to larger quarters now occupied by Conner's Garage. In 1922 he purchased an interest in Herrick Bros. Co. automobile business on lower Main Street. He later bought the business and enlarged and completely modernized the premises. He held the Ford agency for some 12 years and did a large business.

For the past two years since selling the garage Mr. Herrick has been engaged in the machine shop of Herrick Bros. part of the time. His many friends congratulate him on his appointment.

SO. PARIS TEAMS PLAY HERE FRIDAY

Varsity and Second Teams Close Home Season With Games Expected To Be Thrillers

The fast traveling South Paris High School teams will furnish the attraction at William Bingham Gymnasium, Friday night. At 7:30 the South Paris second team, the only team to trim the local underdogs so far this year, will again try to do the trick. This first game ended in a 26-24 victory for the Paris youngsters and the local boys are bent on avenging the defeat.

At 8:30 the varsity teams will clash in what should be a thriller. Although the local outfit was beaten quite badly at Paris, they have improved to such an extent that a victory is not at all impossible. Gould's victory over Bridgton, a team that has twice defeated South Paris, is proof that the Blue and Gold has a chance of turning the tables on a team that has already beaten them by a score of 35-17.

It is hoped that a large crowd will attend this last home game of the season.

REDDING URGES SUPPORT OF COMMISSION REPORT

The Parent-Teacher meeting, Monday evening, was well attended and a very interesting meeting. The charter for this local organization has been received from the State branch. The association has purchased equipment for serving soup to supplement the noon lunches here in the village schools.

Mr. Redding stressed the positive necessity of all citizens supporting the Finance Commission report and pointed out the future of Maine's educational program if some measures are not taken soon. The topic, "Why Education?" was the theme of his talk and was much enjoyed by all those present.

NORTH WOODSTOCK

Kenneth Buck has returned from the Rumford Hospital and is gaining.

Bernard Cushman is not very well since having his throat operated on last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Lou Giroux of Rumford called at Edgar Davis' Sunday.

Joseph Barrett was a week end guest of his wife and son.

Everett H. Cole and James Barrett Cross of Howe Hill, Maine were in Lewiston Saturday.

Many have been sick with the prevailing epidemic.

Fred Whitman of Norway visited his sister, Mrs. George Whitman, and his son, Arthur, one afternoon last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Herman Cole and Richard visited Sunday with their daughter and husband, Mr. O. O. Otis Dudley.

Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm Downing visited Sunday, Feb. 3, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Russ.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Noyes and family called on friends in this vicinity Sunday.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

Feb. 10—This has been one of the best days of the winter. The sun shines as in a southern clime. The thermometer at noon was 40 above zero. Everybody is enjoying the day.

Feb. 11—This day is pleasant although a cold wind blows and the temperature is lowering.

Arthur Farrington and Miss Anna Lakeway, both of Bryant, were in South Woodstock on Sunday, guests of Arthur's father, James Pearl Harrington, of this place.

"Ted" Roberts was a week end guest of Mr. and Mrs. Ned Herrick. Their pleasant home near the Woodstock-Paris town line.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Davis spent the day recently in Bridgton, the seats of the Pingrees, relatives of Mrs. Davis living in that town.

Two young men, Chase and Simpson, classmates of Stanley Andrews at an embalming school which they are attending, were guests at Andrews' over the week end, returning to Boston late Sunday afternoon.

Town meeting will soon be held here. Every year it seems that the burdens are placed on those unable to bear them. The time will come soon when every farmer in this part of the town will have to lean on the relief roll, unless he has some side line outside of his farm.

Over the history of the world have the farmers of the town of Woodstock been so hard put to it and ways and means to pay their taxes as in the year just passed. I hope every means possible will be used to save on taxation.

The oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alvah Hendrickson is very ill at her home here, where she recently submitted to surgery. Miss Hendrickson some time ago underwent a very critical operation and never fully recovered from complications, suffering pain for some time. It was thought advisable to operate. The operation was performed by Dr. Kay of West Paris, with Mrs. Flossie Perham, R. N. in care for the sick girl. Miss Hendrickson is a sophomore in Woodstock High School.

A couple of crows, harbingers of springtime or specimens of poor acclimation of what the winter has proved to be, were seen by several recently apparently going south, that is, they were flying in that direction. Very few birds of any kind have been seen this winter. Only a few flocks of snowbirds. Where are the old favorites, the chickadees, now we all miss their merry chickadee-dee-dee.

TRAINING COURSE FOR FORD SALESMEN

An intensive training course for men engaged in the sale of Ford cars in New England has been inaugurated by the Ford Motor Company to educate salesmen in recent developments in the automotive industry and to aid them in solving the automotive problems of the public. Especial attention is being given to the many features in the 1935 Ford V-8 which meet the current requirements of motorists everywhere.

Hundreds of salesmen in New England will be thoroughly schooled in the scientific presentation of the merits of the new Ford car and will have a better understanding of why the new Ford V-8 for 1935 is the most important Ford contribution to motoring since the introduction of the Ford V-8 engine. The new exclusive Ford development—the full-floating spring base which gives the ease, smoothness and comfort of a "front seat ride" even to back seat passengers will be covered completely in this salesmen's course, as well as other major improvements in the Ford V-8 for 1935.

Every salesman will be required to take the training course which, in a very short space of time, will give him an intensive education in all phases of the Ford background and present manufacturing policies and facilities. Not only will the instructor explain in detail every part used in the production of a Ford car, but definite reasons for its use will be given. The chassis and body will be gone over minutely from bumper to bumper, and at the end of the course salesmen will be able to meet every question which may arise. In addition, slide films, expertly prepared, will review all of the outstanding features of Ford cars and trucks. Part of the program also will include giving the men an intelligent understanding of the time payment method of buying automobiles through the facilities of the Universal Credit Co., the authorized Ford Finance Plan. At the conclusion of the course the salesmen will make a tour of the Ford Somerville plant, where the men will study the actual assembly of Ford cars and trucks.

Merely added to regular lubricants, PYROL perpetually re-pays on all wearing parts a virtually indestructible, self-lubricating surface which is impervious to cold, or heat or to dilution. This "PYROL SURFACE" prevents metal-to-metal wear.

Inventors and Discoverers

The men who discover the underlying, unifying principles and laws of nature are those rare, penetrating geniuses who open the way for a thousand lesser men to put them to practical use. The principle of antitoxins was discovered by that mighty mind, Louis Pasteur, but many men, using this principle, have invented vaccines. Faraday discovered the principle of electrical action out of which have grown thousands of inventions. It is hard to draw the line between "pure" science—the discovery of new methods of research and new principles in nature—and "applied" science—putting it to practical use. Some men have been both inventors and discoverers—Edison, Marconi, the Wrights, Bell and numerous others.

Giant's Memorial

Over a grave in the village cemetery of St. Ann, N. S., and overlooking the bluish-green Atlantic waters of St. Ann Harbor, stands a plain gray stone. "Mark the perfect man," its inscription exhorts the reader, "and behold the upright." Above the simple phrasing is the name of Angus MacAskill, for this is the headstone of the Cape Breton giant. It is the only memorial to a man who by his sheer physical stature carried the name of Nova Scotia into the four quarters of the globe three-quarters of a century or more ago.

Early Americans Built

Churches by Lotteries

Lotteries, under ban by federal law, once flourished in Philadelphia,
"cradle of American liberty," observes a United Press writer.
Dating as far back as 1753, churches used "public gambling" as a means to raise money for a new steeple, clock tower, or whatever was needed.

Probably the first sanctioned public lottery was the one inaugurated by Benjamin Franklin and his friends to build an "Association National" as protection against feared attacks during the early British-French clashes. Tickets were sold for 10 shillings each.

Popularity of the "gambling" became so great that by 1790 lotteries were being held in all sections throughout the Philadelphia area.

At the outbreak of the Revolutionary war the thirteen states, nearly in need of money to finance their armies and fight for independence sanctioned lotteries and congress authorized printing of 100,000 tickets.

Some of the more important lotteries before and during the Revolution were: For 2,000 pieces of eight to ten St. Paul's Episcopal church, to raise $200 to finish Trinity church, Oxford; to raise $3,000 for the New Jersey college, which later became Princeton university; and to raise $100,000 to build a light-house at Cape Henlopen and improve navigation in the Delaware.

Someone from Home

by Lawrence Hawthorne

She welcomed me with trembling hands,
And eyes that smiled through tears—
I was the first old friend from home She'd seen in twenty years!
"Someone from home," she said, and sighed;
"Oh, you could never know How good it is to have you here!
I miss my old friends so!"

We talked about our yesterdays—
About the folks we knew Long years ago; we talked about
The things we used to do.
Her heart still clung to memories
Of days when life was glad;
But oh, how lonely she had grown,
How desolate and sad!

The time for parting came too soon;
She plead with me to stay;
Someone from home gave her more joy
Than words could ever say...
And I shall cherish through the years
The brave and wistful smile
With which she thanked me—just because I talked with her awhile.

The ominous word "strike" is no longer found daily in newspaper headlines. But this doesn't mean that labor is satisfied either with government labor plans or industry.
It is as far from holding out the palm of peace now as it was a year ago.

Washington observers have been forecasting a labor blow-up for some months—and it looks as if that long-feared event put in its official appearance on February 2.
On that day, burly, hard-boiled John H. Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, thrust a thick wedge between the American Federation of Labor and the Roosevelt Administration.

Focal point of Mr. Lewis' attack was Donald Richberg, who is often termed "the Assistant President." Reason for the attack was renewal of the existing automobile code, which the Federation has bitterly opposed, in that it permits men to work 48 hours per week—as compared to the 30-hour week for all industry, which the Federation passionately espouses.

You may not believe in Mr. Lewis' opinions—millions of people don't—but it is generally agreed that he is sincere, honest and outspoken. He represents the old-time, belligerent type of labor leader who has definite opinions and doesn't mind airing them. When he becomes involved in a verbal duel, he never wears gloves.

Mr. Lewis said flatly that Donald Richberg is a "traitor to organized labor." He stated that Mr. Richberg has deserted his former comrades.
It is interesting to remember, in this connection, that Mr. Richberg made his reputation as a hard-fighting labor lawyer, that when General Johnson appointed him to the post of NRA counsel, conservatives feared he would be excessively pro-labor in his attitude.

Mr. Richberg's reply to the union charge of treason, was that it amounted to a demand that he put union interests above loyalty to his government. He added: "If a refusal to yield to such a demand betreason, let those who charge it make the most of it."

Mr. Lewis is often at odds with his A. F. of L. associates, and his opinions might have been largely disregarded as being of a purely personal nature, had not A. F. of L. President Green followed him up by saying that the Lewis statement
"reflects the Federation's feelings very strongly." Mr. Green then said that he would shortly go to the White House with a union protest against delay in codification of the tobacco industry.

That brings up another important point in the widening gap between Administration and labor leaders. Cigarette manufacturers, afraid of unionization of their industry, will have nothing to do with the proposed tobacco code. That, to labor's way of thinking, is bad enough—and it becomes infinitely worse in the light of the fact that the NRA chairman is S. Clay Williams, formerly president of one of the "big three" cigarette makers—
the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. NRA officials have said several times that Mr. Williams withdraws from board meetings when the tobacco code is being discus-ed, in an effort to avoid charges of prejudice—but labor doesn't seem to be convinced. They don't call the NRA officials liars directly—but they intimate just about that.

It is noteworthy that union leaders have not yet criticized the President—all the criticism is directed toward various of his aides. However, Mr. Roosevelt makes all present government policies, and Mr.
Richberg, Mr. Williams and others are directly responsible to him. It is therefore possible that the labor leaders will eventually come out with direct criticism of the President—and the potential political results of that would be tremendous. A. F. of L.'s membership is imposing in size and it is usually considered a potent political influence. Whether that is true or not will be seen in the future—some believe that the rank and file of labor does not follow its leaders blindly, that Mr. Green and Mr.
Lewis and other union heads control fewer votes than they think.

At any rate, the Labor-Administration battle is likely to be one of the most important internal problems of the next year. Whether strikes will result—and on a greater scale than a year ago—cannot be safely forecast now.

The Annalist reports that sustained expansion in steel output continues to dominate the business outlook. Practically all steel users are increasing their orders, with the automobile industry showing greatest advance in demand for ingots.

Also encouraging is a substantial, sustained upturn in construction contracts—the building industry was hit hardest of all by depression, has been the slowest to pick up.

The Wall Street Journal reports a rise in the net profits of some leading power and light utilities—this industry, for the past few

The MAINE MEETING FLATE

by EARLE DOUCETTE

If your humble correspondent can only keep his ears from freezing harder than a Model T Ford at the north pole, he will probably have seen, before gentle spring drifts around, the greatest winter sports year in the history of the well-known Pine Tree State.

First, we saw the snowshoers of the country aggregate at Lewiston.
Then, with our feet still as cold as an ice box salad, we saw the first winter sports train pull out for Fryeburg. We missed the big doings at Fort Fairfield only because we—and this is beginning to sound like two of us—had to go to Boston on that week-end and torture the either ways by means of radio.

This past Saturday and Sunday saw us at Rumford during the next big event, the big U. S. Eastern Ski Championships at which the cream of the ski world competed. This week-end—who has a good remedy for chilblains?—we will probably be at Cornish where the Kiwanis of that town are starting something.

All in all, it looks as though Maine, or a part of it, has at last become winter sports conscious. It is another angle of the recreational business that seems to be decidedly worth while. Of course, as a dollars and cents proposition, it cannot compare with summer business, but even so, it brings some money here that we wouldn't get otherwise. Then too, it looks as though the whole thing would get bigger and bigger as time goes on, as winter sports are far more popular at present than ever before.

Running hand in hand with well-known fact that getting a bit is almost an absolute necessity before a rabbit stew can be any community before the the winter sports trade must certain necessary preparation.

The simplest and cheapest these consist of making a snowshoe trails and ski-run-work is easily accomplished by moving stumps, rocks and impediments to successful pro-under the direction of exversed in what is needed. Ma-fluent communities can ex-their attractions by building jumps, toboggan slides, and rinks and the like.

In the past, there has been misunderstanding about all few of our unthinking citizens beware the fact that other have skimmed the cream of winter sports trade and won-why the Maine Development mission didn't do something it.

A little thought would have gested the impossibility of Commission favoring any munities by building the nec-props for snow events. This must, if we are to preserve ness, be left to the communities themselves.

We can, and are glad to, keep the publicity. In this way we keep the snowball rolling and happ after a while with ever-cheering, we can make Maine winter, as well as the summer recreational paradise.
Let's hope so, anyhow.

He's the Father of Five Sets of Twins

Whenever the doctor came to attend a birth at the Harry Fildfield menage, at Putnam, Conn., he seemed aware of the fact that he would have to do double duty. Five times the stork arrived and each time he brought two children. The five sets of twins—in a row—is considered somewhat of a record in the United States. One pair is not shown here. They arrived just recently. Left to right are Harry Fildfield, Benny, Elizabeth, Harry, Jr., Charlotte, Harriet, Helen, Della, Claire and Marguerite. In front is the family pet.

G. A. 39-BRIDGTON 31 ALUMNI BEATS GOULD

In a hard fought game Gould Academy upset the dope bucket by defeating the strong Bridgton team, which had previously defeated South Paris twice. Gould succeeded in gaining an early 10-4 lead with Bob Browne leading the scoring. Bridgton, however, scored three long shots to tie the count at 10-10 as the period ended.

At the beginning of the second period Browne was painfully injured after a collision with Bridgton's back guard and had to be removed from the game. Charley Smith, who relieved him, played an excellent game and scored ten of Gould's points. Closely following Browne and Smith in scoring were Daniels with nine points and Wentzel with seven.

For Bridgton, Shorey led the attack with eight points while Leigh-ton at center scored six while he was in the game. Leighton, Wight, and Wentzel were all removed from the game with four personal fouls each. The visitors' eagle eye from the foul line kept them in the running as they scored 11 out of 16 attempts.

Massachusetts Family
Has Unexpected Guest

Newton, Mass.—The Mansfields had unexpected company that arrived at their door by automobile. Mary F. McElone, the visitor, who was driving her car for only the second time, with a companion, became confused, stepped on the accelerator instead of the brake, mistook John J. Mansfield's driveway for a street, drove over the front lawn, and ended her escapade by plowing through the front door into the reception hall. A pair of stairs stopped her, or, perhaps, she might have toured the house.

When Noise Is Harmful

Is noise definitely injurious to health? This topical question is discussed from a new angle by an ear specialist in the British Medical Journal. A healthy ear, he states, can stand ordinary traffic noise without suffering much, if any, damage. This, however, does not hold good for the over sensitive and weakly. The grave damage that noise inflicts upon the sick is emphasized. There are many diseases, says the specialist, in which quiet is of much greater importance than diet.

Ease Comes First

Chairs for the modern home have had careful attention from manufacturers with the result that new designs are created for personal comfort as well as smart appearance. The barrel chair is cut back a bit and lowered so there is not that humped-in feeling that sometimes is a drawback. The new chair is called a channel chair and is decoratively effective and comfortable. Today one finds deep chairs for the person with long legs and low, shallow chairs for the shorter person. In fact, a chair can be selected to fit each member of the family.

The comfort of one chair and its adaptability to the purpose intended is of first consideration. Comfortable chairs can now be found that harmonize with any period of furniture. In selecting such a chair for either man or business woman to spend evening after evening, there is nothing better, in moderate price, than the English club style, upholstered in whatever material you like. Leather is smart, but so are other materials.

Just Five Minutes

OFFICER O'DAY looked puzzled when a sleek town car slid to a stop in front of the Martin Jewelry company and the chauffeur sat woodenly indifferent while the car's other occupant fumbled with the door handle. Officer O'day took huge steps across the sidewalk to open the door himself.

An attractive young woman met his glance with startled eyes and a quick flash.

"Thank you so much," she murmured.

The store was deserted except for Mr. Martin and the bookkeeper bent over a ledger. Mr. Martin hurried forward to wait upon the woman.

"I'd like to see some diamond rings," she said.

Mr. Martin glanced at the woman curiously. So many of his patrons nowadays were likely to wear just slightly shabby clothes. He noticed that this customer's fashionable tan coat and hat looked new and expensive. Even the matching parasol with its carved handle appeared unused. Whereupon Mr. Martin placed his most expensive stock of diamonds on the counter.

A happy smile lit up the woman's face as she selected a ring with perhaps the largest stone of the display. She tried it on.

"You know," she confided in a husky voice, "I made some money, a wise investment, and I added I'd earned a diamond."

"An excellent idea; excellent," Mr. Martin said, trying to appear nonchalant. She raised her hand to see the diamond closely. At that instant the loop of the parasol slid off her arm and it hit the floor with a muffled thud. Quickly the woman bent to retrieve it.

"These other rings," she said, "I wonder if I might care for one of them."

A worried frown came to Mr. Martin's face. He wanted desperately to sell the large diamond.

Slowly, very carefully, the woman's left hand slid down the handle of her parasol, down to the framework, and dropped the big diamond among the folds.

The instant that it dropped the woman slid the other rings into a small pile.

"After all," she said, with a straight-forward smile, "I don't know which I like best." She pulled on her gloves. "I'll return in an hour or two, when I have decided."

That had been almost too easy, she thought. There had been a question in her mind whether she could place the diamonds in a pile. But now—five more precious minutes. She walked slowly a few feet. Confidence now, nothing could go wrong. Jim out there, taut ready to speed away.

Mr. Martin kept pace with her on his side of the counter.

The woman stopped short when she saw a display of beaded bags. "Oh, aren't they adorable?" Instantly Mr. Martin was placing a half dozen on the counter.

Glancing at her tiny jeweled wrist watch the woman said doubtfully, "I really shouldn't." Jim out there in the car would be fuming with nervousness. They had planned that she would take no longer than fifteen minutes. The motor would be running, they would drive quickly a few blocks into a certain garage. Their clothing was laid out. She knew too that even as they donned the clothes that would so change their appearance, the man in the garage would be rushing through the paint job that would make the big car unrecognizable.

But what of five minutes and Jim's uneasiness, the woman thought contemptuously. Leisurely she opened the bags, compared them. There was one, a rich dark one that she seemed to prefer. When she turned away from the counter it lay at the bottom of her parasol. She heard herself murmur things—no, not today after all. Once more she glanced at her watch. Slightly more than five minutes had elapsed while she had examined the bags. Her heart beat a little faster.

But still she talked pleasantly to Mr. Martin as she walked to the door, and then, involuntarily, she took a deep breath.

"Nice little rain," Mr. Martin said behind her.

She hesitated with the door partly open when Officer O'Day came into view. He was smiling broadly. "Just an April shower, only started five minutes ago," he said and then reached for her parasol. "Allow me—"

"No, oh, no," the woman said and her voice sounded strangely excited. "It doesn't work," she explained quickly.

Patrick O'Day would never have it known that as little a thing as a lady's parasol ever refused to yield to him.

"Oh, I can fix it," he said confidently and pulled the parasol from the woman's conclusive grip.

With nightmarish clarity, the woman beheld several scenes the next instant: Patrick O'Day raising the parasol, peering at it. Then the dull thud of a beaded bag as it hit the sidewalk and the lighter tinkle of a diamond ring as it bounded into the gutter. That amazed expression on the officer's face; Mr. Martin yelling hoarsely and Jim, the rat, pulling away from the curb, roaring down the street, alone!

THE STORY

AFTER I—Theodore Gatlin decided to adopt a baby in a final effort to solve his matrimonial troubles. But all his love for their foster child could not shelter her from the hatred of his wife who had never wanted her. The affair ended in the divorce but ten-year-old Penelope was left in the keeping of Mrs. Gatlin except for two Sunday afternoons a month. On their first day they set out joyfully to play game. A ball, hit into the stars, struck Penelope on the head and the neurotic Mrs. Gatlin removed her from the hospital which her former husband had left her. Mrs. Gatlin retired to Europe. Gatlin, retired business, willed Penelope all money, and was about to begin work for his daughter when an accident ended his life.

CHAPTER II

STEFAN BURT, M. D., was the son of a man whose waiting list always would have been long, even if he had not been quartered as capable as his colleagues knew him to be. He was a man of sweet simplicity, absolute honesty and overwhelming sympathy. In short, he possessed the ideal personality for a successful physician.

Dr. Lanning was his office nurse, running schools for nurses—at it was so in the hospital. Miss Lanning was trained—and interned develop the sort of democracy and comradeship which delights in nicknames—and dispensing with formality. Quite in her professional career, before Miss Lanning became a nurse, she was a good looking, capable, tremendously intelligent, forceful, driven person, exactly the type that inevitably become an old friend. When Lanny was thirty years old, Stephen Burt was sixteen, she had been his patient. He had said, "What a nice, well-mannered boy!" she thought, the first time she had him. "What a dear," she reflected the second day. "A good, kind, considerate patient," she exclaimed to the doctor the third day. "He must have a sensible mother."

"The doctor had said, 'I never knew her and he did the boy. She died at birth. He's man-raised. His mother is an old friend and patient of mine.'"

"Is he a stepmother?" Even Lanny realized she would be a pang of jealousy if the doctor answered in the affirmative for already the boy had had her maternal instinct. She had felt to learn that his father had fostered no such trial upon her.

On the fourth day of his illness, he called him "dearie." On the fifth day, when she proffered him oil, he rebelled; but when she said, "Now, darling, I'll tell you how to obey me," he had been instantly contrite, and took it—and Lanny had been because he was such a child and hadn't any mother—not a stepmother!

"He said to her on the third day, 'do you know I love you? I wish dad would marry you so you could be with me all the time.'"

His heart swelled with the grief of her baffled maternal instinct that honest boyish avowal. The eighth day he developed pneumonia, as a sequel to measles. He almost died—and Lanny. The doctor swore—that Stephen's father—that but Lanny's devoted nurse

ing brought him through. She wept the day she realized if she drew another day's salary as his nurse, she would be accepting money under false pretenses; and she wept on two counts. First, because she was leaving Stephen, and second, because Stephen's father insisted on being too grateful for her services.

"There is a reward due you, Miss Lanning," he told her, "over and beyond the trifling remuneration given you in exchange for your devoted services. That's a debt Steve and I can never repay, but the boy thinks we ought to make a pretense at payment and so do I." And he opened her hand-bag and slipped an envelope in it.

When she got back to the nurses' home, where she lived between calls, she discovered he had given her five thousand dollars! Young Stephen had already given her his photograph, indorsed: "To my dear Lanny, with love from Steve."

Nursing is the most personal and impersonal profession in the world. Lanny never expected to see Stephen Burt again, but she sent him at Christmas a four-ounce Fairy fishing rod from Hardy's in London. It cost her a month's wages. She knew his father was a fishing enthusiast and would probably inculcate the same enthusiasm in his boy. Steve had sent her roses on her birthday; and his love, by telegraph, Christmas eve, together with an exquisite little watch to replace the dollar timepiece she used to count pulse beats. On New Year's day, a year later, he made a formal call and she was out on a case; so the day she was relieved she called upon him.

"Hello, Lanny," he said—and kissed her. "I wanted to see you to get some advice. Do you think, Lanny, that I'd make a half decent doctor?"

"God made you for a doctor," Lanny assured him. "You'll not have to be more than a mediocre doctor to be financially successful. You were born with the ideal personality."

"Thanks, Lanny. I want to be a doctor, but I want to be a good one, too, so you tell me what I am to do about it. I've just graduated from high school. Made the honor roll," he confessed shyly.

"Where shall I go to college, Lanny?"

"Where do you intend to practice when you're a doctor, Steve?"

"Right here, in San Francisco."

"In that event you should attend a local university. You'll go to Stanford University," Lanny decided. "If you graduate with honor there you're bound to get an internship in Stanford University hospital. About two years of that and you'll know what you want to specialize in, so off you'll go for a post-graduate course in Berlin, Vienna and London for four years. Then you'll return and I'll be your office nurse and manager. How's that for a program?"

"Just dandy, Lanny."

"It means ten years of grind, Steve, but don't let time frighten you," she warned anxiously. "Once you know what you know and know that you know it, others will not be long discovering it also, and you'll be years ahead of the half-baked medical dunces this medical world is cursed with."

He flattered her immensely by taking her to luncheon and the matinee.

For the next four years Lanny did not see her boy, but he wrote her and remembered her at Christmas and on her birthdays. He was an honor graduate from the Leland Stanford Junior Medical school and was immediately given an internship at the University hospital in San Francisco. Inasmuch as Lanny frequently had patients at that hospital, they met several times a year. Lanny kept her ear to the ground, harkening to reports of his progress from worthwhile sources.

"Oh, Lanny, You Dear Old Sport. I Can't Do That!"

and learned that he was regarded as a young doctor of distinct promise.

One day, after he had been two years an interne, they met in the corridor. "I've been wanting to see you, Steve," Lanny began without any preliminary fencing. "It's time for your postgraduate course in Europe."

"Impossible, Lanny. My father has had a frightful reversal of fortune. He's done a father's full duty by me and I'm not going to graft off him and perhaps sacrifice him in his old age. I'm self-supporting now and even saving a little from my salary. In a few years I shall be able to afford a modest office and go in for general practice."

"You've followed my program thus far and you'll continue until it's finished," Lanny announced. "I'll loan you the money. The five thousand dollars your father gave me has grown to seventy-five hundred dollars—and I've saved two thousand more, so I'm going to bank you, and you shall pay me six per cent on the money you borrow, and secure me by life insurance." She was thoughtful for a few moments. "Well, perhaps three years abroad will benefit you more than four years would an ordinary man. So we'll cut the program to three years. After all, you must have some comforts; you've got to live like a gentleman. You will resign here today and I'll have the money for you tomorrow."

"Oh, Lanny, you dear old sport, I can't do that!"

Thereupon Lanny struck him in a vital spot. Her stern and lonely soul was touched. Not often did she indulge herself in the weakness of tears, but they flooded her eyes now and her breast heaved.

He was always touched at the sight of suffering; the vast underlying sympathy in his nature would never have it otherwise. Abruptly she left him! She knew he would seek her out later, to protest at greater length, to avow himself her eternal debtor for the offer and again decline it.

Well, she had her way, and when he returned from Europe she had an office ready for him. She would be forty years old on her next birthday, and after eighteen years of the drudgery of private nursing she looked forward to her position in Stephen Burt's office with pleasurable anticipation.

She met him at the ferry depot, and he took her to his heart and kissed her five times—twice on each cheek and once on the lips. "Well, old pal," he said almost immediately. "I'm a specialist. Neurologist and psychiatrist, and you're to be my first patient. I must go over you thoroughly and see what makes you act the way you do."

Success was Stephen's. Modest at first, of course, but of rapid growth, and Lanny knew why. His patients fell in love with him and advertised him to their friends.

In two years Stephen Burt had repaid Lanny with interest; the third year he moved into new, sunny, roomy and beautifully furnished offices, with a waiting room as large as all of his previous offices had been. He joined the best club in town; he joined a country club, and resolutely Lanny drove him out of the office on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons to play golf. She denied him the privilege of naming his own fees because she knew they would be too modest; she kept his free list to a minimum; knowing all his friends, she supervised his social duties; she kept his books and was a very devil of a collector; she wrote all his business letters and signed them for him; she invested his money for him, and since she was no mean psychologist, she could read a woman patient as she would a book. She was his Admirable Crichton, and he rewarded her with his confidence, his affectionate friendship and a perfectly dazzling salary raise each Christmas.

He always kissed her at six o'clock on the twenty-fourth day of December in each year for the five years preceding the late winter afternoon when Mr. Daniel McNamara called in behalf of the strangest patient Lanny's boy had ever been asked to accept.

It had been a long, hard day. Doctor Burt was tired, and a Mrs. Reginald Merton, who was rich and idle, not very intelligent and hence neurasthenic, had been fatiguing him with a recital of her imaginary aches, pains and migraines.

He pressed a button under the desk, tapping out a code message to Lanny, and waited patiently.

He knew she would appear momentarily and say: "I'm sorry, Doctor Burt, but Professor Finnegan has just telephoned that you are fifteen minutes late to your engagement to meet the great German savant, Herr Doktor Goltz."

He waited three minutes and sent another code message to Lanny, adding the word "Help." Still Lanny did not appear, so he said with his disarming smile: "Mrs. Merton, the five o'clock whistle has blown, and I can't listen to another word. I've just remembered a most pressing engagement, so now if you do not go at once I shall have to throw you out."

He had her by the arm and out the door before she could think of another symptom. Then he locked the door, put both legs up on the desk and loaded and lighted his pipe, just as the door to his nurse's office opened and Lanny said:

"I'm so sorry, but Professor Finnegan—"

"She's gone. Where did you go, leaving me here to suffer?"

"I was in the waiting room placating an insistent visitor. I told him you had gone for the day, but he flashed some sort of police badge at me, said he wasn't nutty and that his business was private."

"Whenever you admit a person whose business is private and personal I am called upon for mental and physical effort, sans a fee, Lanny. I'm tired."

"What you need, dearie," said Lanny, "is a nice, long, cool, high bath."

"And what you're on the job, get me one, too," a deep voice spoke from the door behind her.

"It's that police person," Lanny cried.

"It is," the police person agreed without falter, "and even if I am a cop, I'm too smart to be fooled by the fibs of any woman. How are you, Doc?"

"Tired," he murmured. "Worn to a razor edge talking sanely to the insane and the semi-insane, the abnormal and the abnormal. You appear sane, officer. Are you?"

"I'd be afraid to take a bet I am Doc. I handle my share of nuttiness, and there's times they make me think I'm lonesome instead of them. My name's Dan McNamara and I'm the chief of police."

"Sit down, Chief. Drag over that armchair." He sat at Lanny's and held up two fingers.

That smile which Lanny had always tried to banish from her face, but which had always come back for which reason she never took a bath, storm and threatened to resign his service. And she would have done it, too, for she was a forceful woman, only for the fear that he might replace her with a nurse who didn't understand him a la-la young thing, had failed professionally, who would fall in love with him and make him marry her. He was so kind and sympathetic Lanny knew he would marry her, just to keep her from feeling bad.

"Don't his sympathy," she growled, as she prepared the drinks in an inner room. "That's why he's worked to death. He'll die young—overwork—angina, the young fool! That big, fresh, heavy-footed cop! How dare he force his way in—the big bum! And getting a drink for his dirty work!"

She snuffed and served the highballs.

"You're mighty sweet, Lanny," Doctor Burt told her. "Now, run along home."
